A singer with a strong personality and a unique act of humorous songs, she quickly rose to prominence and earned top billing at all of Paris' major music halls. Her unusual high hairdo, combined with her long nose to make her an irresistible subject for caricaturists and cartoonists. Both Toulouse-Lautrec and Leonetto Cappiello left behind excellent drawings of her. Jules Cheret, who was a poster designer not a portraitist, interprets her appearance only through her black hair, and captures the spirit of the performer, as the movement suggests her eclectic dancing.
